At the heart of it, both men and women want the same thing from each other in a relationship: to feel "gotten" and understood. But because we approach getting our needs met differently, both men and women are too often left feeling like their partners don't understand or appreciate them. So many men say that they don't feel valued by their women, and so many women say they don't feel cherished by their men. Men often speak of not having enough sexual attention from their partners, and women often say they don't get enough emotional connection. How can we bridge that gap? How can both get their needs met? Learn what pleases women from a woman's perspective, and learn how you can garner the appreciation, attention and affection you so richly deserve from your woman!

Catherine DeMonte, LMFT has been in private practice since 1990. She works with couples and individuals and helps people address and heal the blocks and wounds that keep them from being their most authentic Selves. Her gifts include warm empathy and the ability to get to the heart of the matter. It's often said about her that she can hear what isn't said. She doesn't take sides. She is on the "side" of the relationship. Catherine is passionate about helping couples return to "Head-Over-heels"; that place that had couples wanting to get together in the first place. Please visit her website at www.catherinedemonte.com or call (818) 880-6559.
